One hundred and three people signed up to donate their blood during a clinic at the Didsbury Memorial Complex last week, helping to boost low national stocks before a traditionally draining long weekend.

The national blood inventory has steadily declined this summer and needed a boost to continue to meet the needs of patients through the August long weekend and into the coming weeks, according to a Canadian Blood Services (CBS) statement issued last week.

"Summer is a challenging time when many donors are on vacation and it can lead to a decline in the national blood inventory. Unfortunately, we are below our optimal inventory levels," said CBS communications specialist Deb Steele-Kretschmer last Thursday.

Ideally, CBS says it should have 20,000 - 30,000 units of blood in their inventory.

As of last Thursday, its online inventory chart showed between 15,000 and 20,000 units.

CBS pointed out in its release that the Canada

Safety Council reports "more fatalities occur on Canadian roads during summer months than any other time of year."

It can take up to 50 donors to help save someone who has been in a motor vehicle accident.

The Didsbury donor clinic held on July 27 collected 87 units.

Out of the 154 appointment slots at the Didsbury donor clinic, 151 appointments were filled. One hundred and three people attended, including eight walk-in donors.

There were 13 first time donors and one man who celebrated his 100th donation. Orville Ulry of Olds was given a pin to mark the occasion.

Steele-Kretschmer said CBS is faced with the challenge of an aging donor population base.

"Our regular donors are aging out of the system, and are in some cases becoming the recipients of blood products themselves. This is why we are constantly educating the public and building awareness in the community of the need for new blood donors within our new generations of Canadians."

CBS typically hosts clinics in Didsbury twice in the summer months.

The not-for-profit charitable organization is helped with its efforts in Didsbury by the Royal Purple Elks and receives support from community media outlets and the Town of Didsbury.

"We are always searching for more new partners and volunteers to help assist in building awareness and engaging new donors in the community," said Steele-Kretschmer.

CBS tends to go to the neighbouring town of Olds four times in the fall and winter, due to a decrease in Olds donors during the summer months as student donors leave for summer vacation.

"Canadian Blood Services relies on the support of the residents of Didsbury and surrounding communities to donate blood on an ongoing basis," said Steele-Kretschmer.

Alberta 55 Plus Summer Games competitors from Didsbury were successful in their respective competitions.

Adeline and William Fedyk placed fifth in 70+ Four Player Bocce while Earl Markham placed second in Mixed Media (Crafts).

More than 2,500 competitors from eight zones across the province qualified through zone playoffs for the right to compete at the 2015 Alberta 55 Plus Summer Games in Strathmore July 16-19.

The Fedyks and Markham represented Zone 2. They were among 1,200 participants from across Alberta who participated.

"The Alberta 55 Plus Games encourages Albertans of a certain age to pursue athletic, physical and social activities in an atmosphere of friendly competition and participation," said John Short, chair of the Alberta Sport Connection.

The games, which run every two years, are coordinated by the Alberta Sport Connection (ASC) with support from the Alberta 55 plus Association.

They featured competition in 17 events including athletics, cycling, 8-ball, golf, slo-pitch, swimming and others.

In Canada, 2015 has been declared the Year of Sport.

It celebrates the role that sport plays in the country and encourages Canadians to participate in and seek the benefits of sport.

In Alberta, the first Alberta Senior Games were in Camrose in 1980.

RCMP focus on property crime reduction

BY PATRICIA RILEY
MVP Staff

Didsbury RCMP officers plan to focus on reducing property crime over the next three months, after seeing an increase in break and enters and thefts this year.

Statistics show there has been 36 break and enters reported across the total detachment area from April 1 to June 30 this year, while during the same time frame last year there were 15.

There were also 46 reports of theft under $5,000 this year, which is an increase from 32 last year.

In Didsbury alone, 10 break and enters were reported this year while seven were reported last year. Twenty-one thefts under $5,000 were also reported this year while 13 were reported last year.

"We're going to be looking at that as a crime trend and trying to figure out what's happening in the area because they are up this year from last year," said Didsbury RCMP Sgt. Kimberley Pasloske.

She said the increase could depend on a variety of things, including the time of day, place, what's being stolen and what the cause is.

"I don't think it's the place. Often we do see those kinds of things in one specific area, you know, there's a crime group going, but it's interesting that it's across the entire detachment area," she said.

Officers plan to find the common threat and act on it. But there are also things people can do to deter thieves from targeting their property.

"A lot of times things aren't being locked up, so we need to get people to lock their things up and do some proactive things," she said.

Those proactive things include installing motion sensor lights on the house and being aware of suspicious activity.

Statistics also show an increase in mischief and arson offences, with 15 reported this year and six reported last year in Didsbury.

Drug charges also increased, which she said is related to a large drug bust in April.

"Drugs is always a concern," she said.

There has also been an increase in reported suspicious activity, which she said is a good thing.

"What that is, is people reporting weird things or seeing different things, so that shows me that the community is actually getting involved and wanting to report things," she said.

With the increase in property crimes reported, there has also been an increase in charges laid for property crimes.

"And that's directly related to people calling in, taking an active role in making their community safe," she said.

More violation tickets and warnings have been handed out as well, which she said is a result of officers being more proactive in the community. There were 32 issued this year and 25 last year. For the total detachment area, there were 184 issued this year and 108 last year. Calls for service in Didsbury have decreased from 681 last year to 406 this year.

Statistics for the total detachment area show a decrease in impaired driving but an increase in licence suspensions.

"The problem with our area is that we're so close to Calgary. It's those criminals that just take a drive out. We do have local criminals, but I'm going to guess that a lot of these are not local criminals," she said.

As part of the detachment's annual performance plan, Pasloske set goals and priorities for the officers in April, which she said are being fulfilled.

"I'm quite happy about where we're at, we're certainly up this year from last year on our proactive patrols. We're exactly where we wanted to be; actually we've exceeded where we wanted to be," she said.

Priorities in the plan include community visibility, contributing to safer roads and crime reduction.

From April 1 to June 30, RCMP officers have conducted 81 patrols to Cremona and Water Valley, 111 bar walks, foot patrols, school visits and school zone patrols, as well as four checkpoints or joint force operations with area peace officers.

Officers have also handed out 124 tickets or warnings for speeding, intersection violations or not wearing seatbelts, and have done six crime reduction presentations about property crime reduction, Internet safety, crime scene forensics and impaired driving.

Pet owners reminded to watch for overheating

BY PATRICIA RILEY
MVP Staff

As the weather reaches high temperatures, pet owners are reminded to watch for signs of overheating in their furry friends.

Tom Picherack, veterinarian at Carstairs Veterinary Services, said vehicles aren't the only places pets can overheat.

He said pets can overheat while they are outside, if they have been in a cool indoor environment for a few hours and are exposed to a hot outdoor environment, or even inside their own home.

Panting and having a lack of energy are signs of overheating inside the house, he said.

"They can't even get up, they just want to lay there and pant and not do anything," said Picherack.

He advises pet owners to put ice cubes in their pet's water dish on hot days, as well as having a wet towel available for them to lie on.

He also advises people to purchase a thermometer and take their pet's rectal temperature if they are concerned with overheating inside the house.

Pets can develop hyperthermia in hot weather, which can be fatal and is mainly caused by leaving pets inside hot vehicles.

Some dogs are more prone to overheating than others, including black dogs, overweight dogs, and older dogs.

"The more compact the dog, the more of a problem there is. And the more harder it is for the dog who's already got breathing issues, like a bulldog - it doesn't take much for them to overheat in a temperature like this outside," he said last week.

He said if people do leave their pets inside a hot vehicle they should leave it running with the air conditioning on.

"It's for the safety of the animal. Cooler is better," he said.

"You get stuffy air that has no flow. It can be really hot but as long as it's windy, it's vibrating the dog's tongue to cool down, where in a car you don't have that at all."

Overheating can also cause brain damage and muscle damage and if it's not fatal there can be permanent damage.

"Thirty-nine point two degrees Celsius is their high end of temperature and if it's 39.2 in the car then they can't cool off at all and they're just going to keep overheating with their own insulation," he said.

When a dog overheats in a vehicle it goes from panting and having an increased heart rate to losing its central nervous brain function and lying on its side and foaming from the mouth.

"But everything takes place so fast when you have a car heat up that you may only have 15 minutes and even if you had a vet right there it's really hard to pull them out of it," he said.

Notes are bitter pills to swallow

BY DARLANA ROBERTSON

Falling ill is something everyone goes through but no one is ever really prepared for. If you work a lower paying job you more than likely have a limited number of sick days permitted, if any at all.

For people who work the kinds of jobs that do not provide paid sick time, or who work for companies that require doctors' notes in the event of an absence, getting sick can be a hard pill to swallow - pun a little intended.

We are fortunate in Canada to enjoy universal health care coverage, unlike our friends south of the border, which is beneficial to our society. It would be easy to adopt the standpoint of not looking a gift horse in the mouth but it seems to me like "universal" health care is a gross misnomer.

Unfortunately, Alberta Health Services only pays for approved, "insured" services, and the patient pays all others out of pocket. For the kinds of people who are lower income earners, they find themselves faced with a dilemma: take a sick day and lose not only a day's wage but the cost of a doctor's note as well, or they can attend work and risk spreading sickness to coworkers or customers.

According to Tim Kulak, public affairs officer for Alberta Health, these uninsured charges are mandated by the Alberta Medical Association and the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta but individual doctors' offices "have discretion to waive charges on compassionate grounds."

Since moving to Calgary I have visited four different walk-in clinics, one of which I signed up for to be my "family doctor." I have never once, not a single time from a single clinic, left with a doctor's note that I didn't have to pay hard-earned money for. The price seems to vary by clinic between $30 and $50.

The hardest pill to swallow of all is that sometimes the notes are not even signed by the doctor. They are printed at the reception desk where a stamp with the doctor's signature is applied to the document - for a nominal fee. Thirty dollars seems like a lot of money for a piece of paper that the doctor could not even be bothered to sign in person.

With the new Alberta provincial government some may be wondering if this particular uninsured service might be revisited. Sadly, according to Kulak, this is not the case. He said the governing New Democratic Party has "no plans to expand coverage under the Alberta Health Care insurance plan to include doctor's notes," - even though those who are most affected by the policy are our province's most destitute.

Interestingly, last fall the CBC published a news article about a doctor in Nova Scotia who has taken to invoicing the patient's employer rather than the patient. Since then other doctors from across Canada have spoken out against the practice, calling for employers to revisit their absentee policies. They argue that requiring doctors' notes ties up valuable health care services, increases wait times, and spreads disease.

Alberta doctors should follow suit. It's time health care returned to a focus on health rather than extraneous costs at the expense to those who need help the most.

More stimulus not the answer

BY AARON WUDRICK

Storm clouds are forming over Canada's economy. Largely in part to a dramatic drop in world oil prices, Canada's economy shrank during the first half of 2015. The drop was small - approximately 0.5 per cent - but a drop nonetheless. And with a federal election call possibly imminent, politicians are naturally looking for ways to convince the voting public that they are "taking action" to "boost" Canada's economy.

Overlooked in this rush to campaign is the fact that the primary factors causing our current malaise are completely outside the control of any Canadian politician (world oil prices, an exceptionally harsh winter and a slowdown in the US economy are seen as the main culprits). So it is depressing to hear the same old faulty argument that the best action the federal government can take to help the economy is to provide "stimulus spending" in the form of deficits and debt.

We have been here before - and yet during the economic downturn which struck in late 2008, the federal government's initial response was, wisely, to largely hold the line on spending and not overreact. Unfortunately, soon thereafter, and for largely political rather than economic reasons, the Harper government plunged Canada into a massive $55 billion deficit, edged on aggressively by the opposition parties whose chief complaint was that the government was still not spending enough.

Fast forward to 2015, and it is widely claimed that this spending binge "worked" by turning the economy around. Yet, there's little empirical evidence to suggest that debt spending caused Canada's economy to rebound. A study by the Fraser Institute concluded that the economic recovery was already underway by late 2009 - when most "stimulus" funds had not yet been spent. Similarly, in 2010 the Parliamentary Budget Office was unable to conclusively identify how many jobs were created as a direct result of deficit spending.

What we do know for sure is that Canada endured seven years of budget deficits and racked up an additional $150 billion in public debt, bringing the total to $616 billion - or about $17,600 for every single Canadian - and for which we now have the privilege of paying interest on to the tune of nearly $29 billion annually. That's $29 billion every year that can't be spent on anything else, from programs for Canadians to further tax relief.

In spite of this policy fiasco, when faced with the prospect of another economic downturn, what are our politicians now proposing? Mercifully, the Harper government has ruled out a return to deficits (although they are now spinning the planned increase in the Universal Child Care Benefit as an "injection" into the economy, which it isn't; it is simply replacing government spending with individual spending). The opposition parties, in contrast, are in the odd position of simultaneously attacking the Harper record of deficits and debt as a failure, while implying that what is required now is more deficits and debt. And none of the parties have put forward a concrete plan to tackle the $616 billion in debt we already owe.

The simple fact is that governments piling up debt and deficits in the name of "stimulus" has huge long-term costs for little to no short-term benefit - with the main beneficiaries being the politicians trawling for votes. Unfortunately, doling out "stimulus" in exchange for votes is often the most stimulating thing for a politician in an election year.

Aaron Wudrick is the federal director of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation.

miss her a lot still today.

The gifts that a Mother, Teacher, and a Community caring citizen are often remembered for many years later and cherished. Serving another human as Jesus did, is the best gift anyone can give. We are thankful for Lucianne's willingness to share her energy, kindness and caring to so many.

A true gift for us all. May God bless her in heaven as she blessed many.
